Teachers are in the business of promoting excellence in thinking and doing.

They are rewarded for this with salaries lower than those of garbage men in their early teaching years, and lower than those of plumbers in their mature careers.

The status of teachers is uncertain. They are envied for their vacations, but insurance agents claim a more basic relationship with mankind, and certainly garbage men make a greater impression when they go on strike.

Pro Dev has decided to do something about this sad situation. If the outside world refuses us just recognition, we'll recognize ourselves. We have Humber's Oscars.

AWARD WINNING STATEMENTS

THE JOHN BASSET AWARD - MOST PATRIOTIC STATEMENT - RALPH RANSOM

"The values of mobile education: travelling broadens your education; broads broaden your travelling."

THE BILL DAVIS AWARD - SHORTEST STATEMENT - AB MELLOR

"I've only been at Humber a year but I consider myself an old-timer because I've aged 20 years in that time. My observation is that Humber is a highly successful learning institution and I've been busy trying to develop some general rules from our operation here that other less successful colleges could profitably adopt. Here they are:

1. Keep the support-staff to faculty ratio above 1 (ours is 14 - 3). This contributes greatly to staff morale and creates a thrifty, economical teaching-learning situation, because most of the money is being spent elsewhere.
2. Design a top-administration apparatus that at least appears unco-ordinated and disorganized. This contributes greatly to staff morale because it creates the feeling that individual instructors have lots of space to do what they think best for their students.
3. Spend most of the conference and trip budget on administrators. It keeps them away from the College a good deal of time and so contributes greatly to staff morale.
4. Create a faculty association which has no local budget, and no concern except arguing with the government continually about more money. This will ensure that faculty will not as a group interfere in college policies and will spend all their time doing what they should be doing - teaching, and fighting with the finance company.
5. Keep photographs (in colour) of the members of the Board of Governors displayed prominently throughout the college. This assures teachers constantly that someone up there cares for them.
6. Develop individualized learning programs so that learning is not restricted to classrooms but can take place in pubs, bedrooms, factories, parks and the backseats of cars. Any college works better when there aren't too many students around.
7. Institutionalize "dreaming" by creating a department of dreaming, headed by at least one vice-president. This gives the college a progressive onward-and-upward tone and permits staff to forget about tomorrow and concentrate on doing a good job now.
8. Keep the college entangled with the community in every possible way through all sorts of outreach activities and courses. This helps to cut down TV watching and increase gasoline tax revenues in the community, and makes Open House Days unnecessary because everyone is at the college all the time anyway.
9. Staff the Professional Development Department with philosophers, generalists and esoteric experts. This lends an air of purity to the college and ensures that the teachers will not be unduly interfered with."

THE PIERRE TRUDEAU AWARD - CLEANEST STATEMENT - FLORENCE MARTIN

"We should be concerned with the growth of the whole person. Courses in sexology would round out our students, and enrich the fantasy lives of our instructors."

THE RICHARD NEEDHAM AWARD - MOST PROFOUND STATEMENT - FRANK RYAN

"Education for education's sake is like eating for eating's sake. One makes a person fat-bellied, the other, fat-headed."

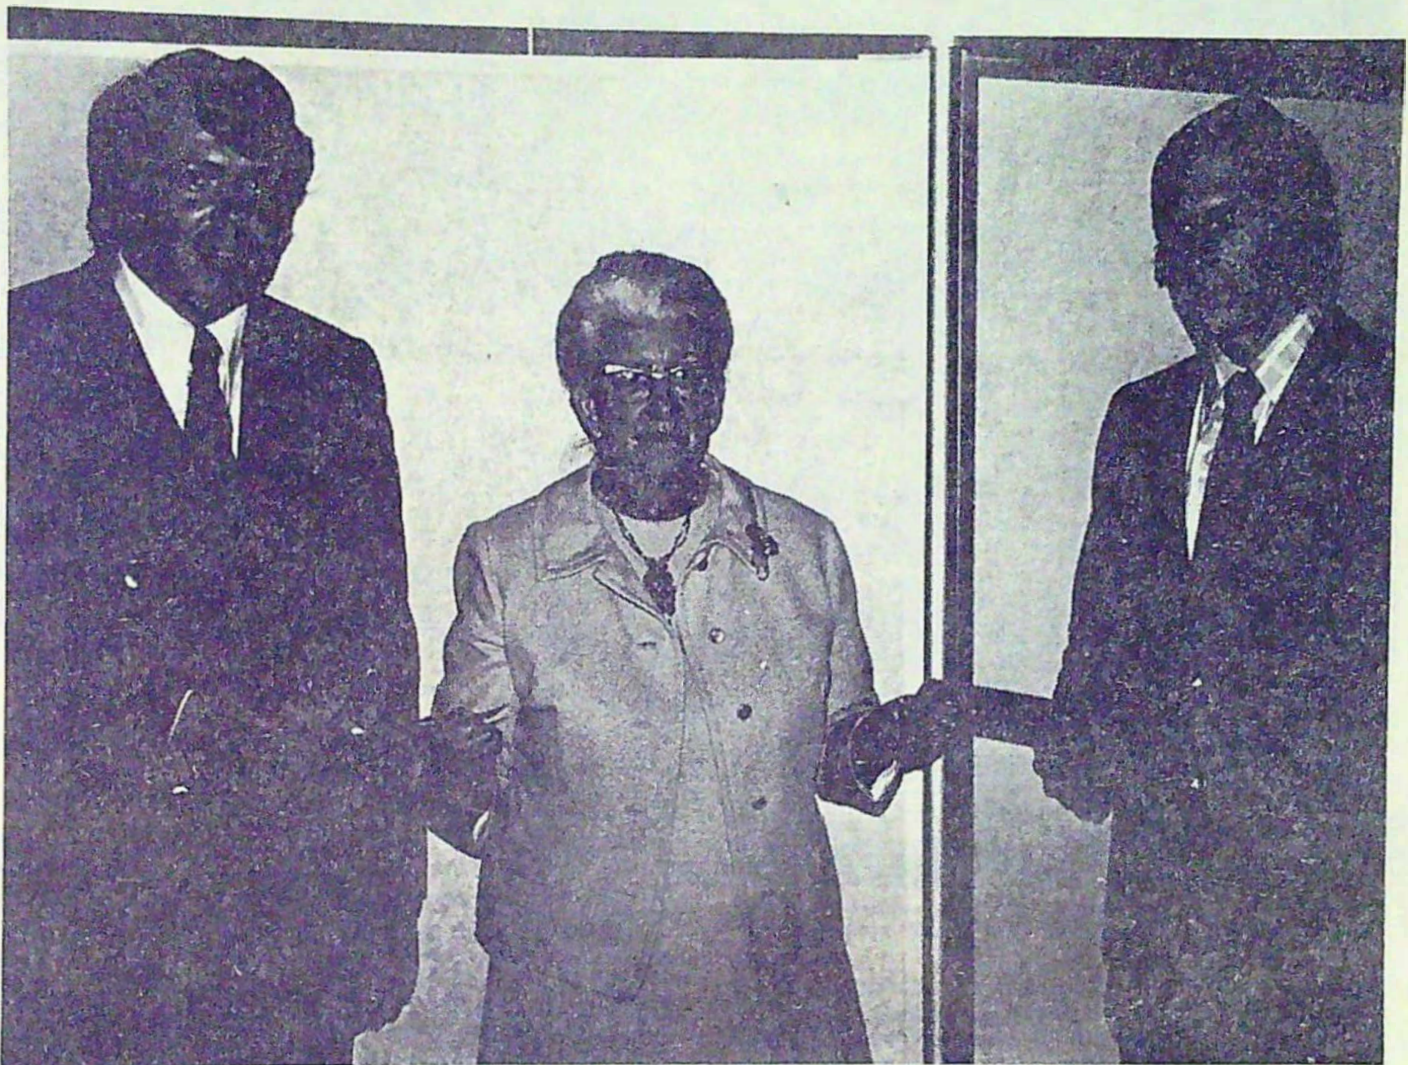

Bill Thompson, Master of Ceremonies at the Oscars.

THE ROBERT STANFIELD AWARD - WITTIEST STATEMENT - MARNIE CLARKE

"Relationships between men and women are like those between the U.S. and Canada. Both are power relationships. Both are half friendly. Just as too many Canadians accept uncritically U.S. values and dominance, so too many women accept passively the values and dominance of males. However, important sectors of both Canada and woman-kind are rejecting servility. Change is in the air and I am convinced that the 21st century will belong to both Canadians and women."

Gary Jeynes and Ron Noblett accept Pinder Award for Humber College.

NORTH YORK PUZZLED ABOUT HUMBER

Twenty members from the North York Board of Education Business Advisory Committee were hosted by the Business Division of Humber College on Tuesday, April 16th.

Elected representatives of the North York Board of Education as well as secondary school teachers visited the College. One of the things they were interested in finding out was why so many students from North York had chosen to come to Humber College last year.

Our unique programs, as well as their flexibility, were reasons given and also our geographic location for those students living in the south west section of North York. Humber College was closer for those students than Seneca's Finch Campus.

Several secondary schools have had representatives from our Business Division to talk to their students about programs at Humber.

PROFILE

JAMES WILLIAM SPEIGHT was one of the first employees of Humber College.

"Well, let's just say there were about five others on staff when I came here," said Speight, Special Assistant in the Centre for Environmental Studies.

Speight was born in St. Thomas on August 7th, 1909 and went to public school and high school there. He attended the University of Western Ontario in London where he obtained his Bachelor's Degree in Physics with first class honors.

Speight received his Master's Degree in Physics with first class honors during post graduate studies and wrote a thesis on Operational Calculus.

During his second year of a doctorate course in Physics at McGill University in Montreal, Speight was the bursar of the National Research Council. He later passed French and German doctorate examinations.

Speight was an instructor in Mathematics and Physics at Ryerson and later held chairmanships in four divisions, Electrical, Mathematics, Electronics and Physics.

In 1966, he was a Member of the Policy Committee of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education. Speight came to Humber in 1967 and until 1971, organized and directed the Technology Division.

Speight established the Centre for Environmental Studies in January 1973 to conduct research and investigation of Environmental Education in general.

The first major event of the Centre was a Noise Seminar last January attended by 300 people and reporters from newspapers, radio and television to hear Margaret Scrivener, MPP-St. David and Deidre Benwell of the Ministry for the Environment.

Speight will be retiring from Humber this summer and says he'll miss the students.

"In the time I've been here I met a lot of students and, well, I'll always remember them as being the best," he said.

"I also hope that someone continues to run the Centre because environment is an important part in the world today."

Speight says his life won't stop because he's retiring.

"I'd like to look at retirement as finding time to do the things I was unable to do and didn't have time to do before."

Pre-school teachers have been deceived, Humber dean says

By JO CARSON
Graduates of early childhood education courses have been led "down the bloody garden path," Ken MacKeracher, dean of continuing education, Humber College, said yesterday.

He referred to an announcement by Ontario Education Minister Thomas Wells which denied graduates the right to teach junior kindergarten classes.

This followed last month's approval of junior kindergartens in all schools in the Metro School Board system bringing them into direct competition with private nursery schools.

Mr. MacKeracher questioned Dr. Douglas Wright, Ontario's Deputy Secretary for Social Development, about the role of community colleges during a discussion period at the conference of the Ontario Association for Continuing Education.

He wanted to know whether Dr. Wright was continuing to support the draft report of the Commission on Post-Secondary Education in Ontario. He had been chairman of the report.

Mr. MacKeracher said that he enthusiastically supported the report because he felt there should be "a role for continuous learning."

There are indications, he added, that the Wright report is not getting the support of the Ontario Government, that financial pressures are being felt which would limit the scope of the colleges.

"We have been named community colleges—but in fact we are colleges of fine arts and technology. We are responsible for training paraprofessionals and are facing a difficult chance of survival."

Dr. Wright: "We don't have a report yet—only a draft."

Mr. MacKeracher: "Roosevelt got the fleet out of mothballs a long time before 1939."

You are a hell of a nice fellow but we're looking for a champion."

Dr. Wright: "We have given you a ticket to lobby."

Pressed to outline financing of programs, Dr. Wright said that certain expectations have been raised and, hopefully, there will be a demand for continuing education.

Mr. MacKeracher said he read the statement to mean that "if someone cuts the water off—he won't get a vote in the ballot box."

Dr. Wright explained carefully that the recommendations in the report were designed for instant change in the education system.

"If we could do a lot of this in a decade it would be great," he said.

Art Ninson, dean of continuing education of Algonquin College of Applied Arts and Technology in Ottawa, also questioned Dr. Wright about financing education programs.

The deputy minister said there would have to be closer co-operation between various Ontario Government departments if proper controls over education spending are to lead to more popular education programs.

He said there has been education inflation, an outcome of the demand for academic degrees. It is also noticeable in universities, where such special studies as chemistry are available only to students with graduate or post-graduate standing, he said.

Such demands for university attendance leads to massive costs. They will keep going up as long as people are selected by the length of time they stay in school."

Pain-relieving medication has its place during childbirth according to a Toronto obstetrician.

Doctor Mel Peterseil of the Scarborough Centenary Hospital is one of the guest speakers at a seminar called "Today's Nurse - Today's Parent".

The seminar will be held on Thursday, June 6th from 9:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. at Humber College's North Campus Lecture Theatre.

"There is a modern tendency to insist on the lack of pain-relieving drugs in labor so that no harm will come to the child," said Doctor Peterseil. "Yet, there is a definite and necessary place for the appropriate use of pain-relieving medication."

The seminar at Humber is planned to help the nurse meet the needs of today's family, before, during and after the childbirth experience.

A panel discussion will be held on the topic "Physical Preparation Before and After Pregnancy" with the chairman of the panel Pat Pugh of the Obstetrical Unit of York County Hospital in Newmarket.

Other speakers include Peter Butler, Sociologist at the University of Toronto; Margaret Risk, Borough of East York Health Unit and Karen Lee, Canadian Physiotherapy Association.

"The role of today's woman is changing very drastically," said Peter Butler, Sociologist at the University of Toronto. "After having a family, many women want to work and do things."

The seminar is open to the public and is $12.50 for lectures, instruction material and lunch.

BIO-FEEDBACK TRAINING AND SELF-CONTROL

Biofeedback is a particular kind of feedback - feedback provided by electronic devices about the functioning of our internal organs - the brain, the heart, the circulatory system, the different muscle groups and so on. Biofeedback training is the procedure that allows us to tune into our bodily functions and, eventually, to control them.

Recently, Umesh Kothare, completed his professional training on "biofeedback" at the University of California. He has had significant success in helping persons (students and staff) to reduce specific anxieties, tension, headaches and other related stress disorders through biofeedback training.

Some students are also using biofeedback (Theta-wave control) to increase their creativity.

Biofeedback demonstration can be easily arranged by calling Umesh at extension 527.

WHO WORKS?

The population of Canada is 22 million people, but there are 8 million over 65 years of age, leaving 14 million people to do the work.

People under 21 total 11 million, leaving 3 million people to do the work.

One hundred thousand in the armed forces leave 2,900,000 to do the work. Deduct 1,700,000 provincial, municipal and city employees which leaves 1,200,000 to do the work.

There are 250,000 people in the hospitals, asylums, etc., leaving 950,000 to do the work. But 450,000 of these are unemployed and 350,000 are on welfare or won't work, so that leaves 150,000 to do the work.

Now, it may interest you to know that there are 130,000 people out of the country at any one time and 19,998 people in jail, so that leaves just two people to do all the work. And that is you and me, Brother, and I'm getting tired of doing all the work myself!!!!

So let's get with it!!
